Instructions:
 The listing to your right contains both U.S. National Grid and Lat-Long coordinates. These are two ways of modeling locations on the Earth's surface. These can be input into a GPS-compatible device and be used to easily find the location.

If you are using a cell phone: Both Waze® and Google Maps® will accept U.S. National Grid coordinates as they are formatted in the list. Google Maps will also accept Lat-Long coordinates as they are formatted in the list. Enter the coordinates in the search field as you would a normal address.

If you are using a handheld GPS receiver: Most units will accept Lat-Long, but note that the second set of numbers is the West longitude (and the first is the North latitude). No negative sign is needed if the unit asks for a direction.

All coordinates given are based on the North American Datum of 1983 (Rev. 2011)
